

MS Teams - Calling v2411

Introduction

With a standard landline, calls can only be answered when in the location of the line - usually within the office. With Teams, calls can be answered anywhere and can be transferred to any mobile number or landline.

Previously may have had one landline in your office meaning only one call could have been made at a time. Multiple calls can now happen simultaneously. Call queues will have been set up so callers will be held in a queue until someone is free, rather than being given the engaged tone.

Every Teams phone user has their own direct dial number assigned to them in the Teams system. It is best to keep this private to prevent others dialling you direct.

Some points to note:

All laptops have internal speakers. Ensure that the sound is unmuted on both the PC and in the VDI.

If you are using a set of headphones on the PC – remember that these have to be plugged in before you log into the VDI. Ensure that the sound is unmuted on both the PC and in the VDI.

If someone waits on the line until voicemail answers but doesn't leave a message – this will not show as a missed call. You don't have to be logged in on the PC for your phone to ring.

Teams is aware of your diary entries. If you are showing "Busy" in your diary your phone will not ring. If everyone opts out of taking calls and has their diaries marked as busy the calls will go to voicemail. (See 'Problem Solving' section for more information).

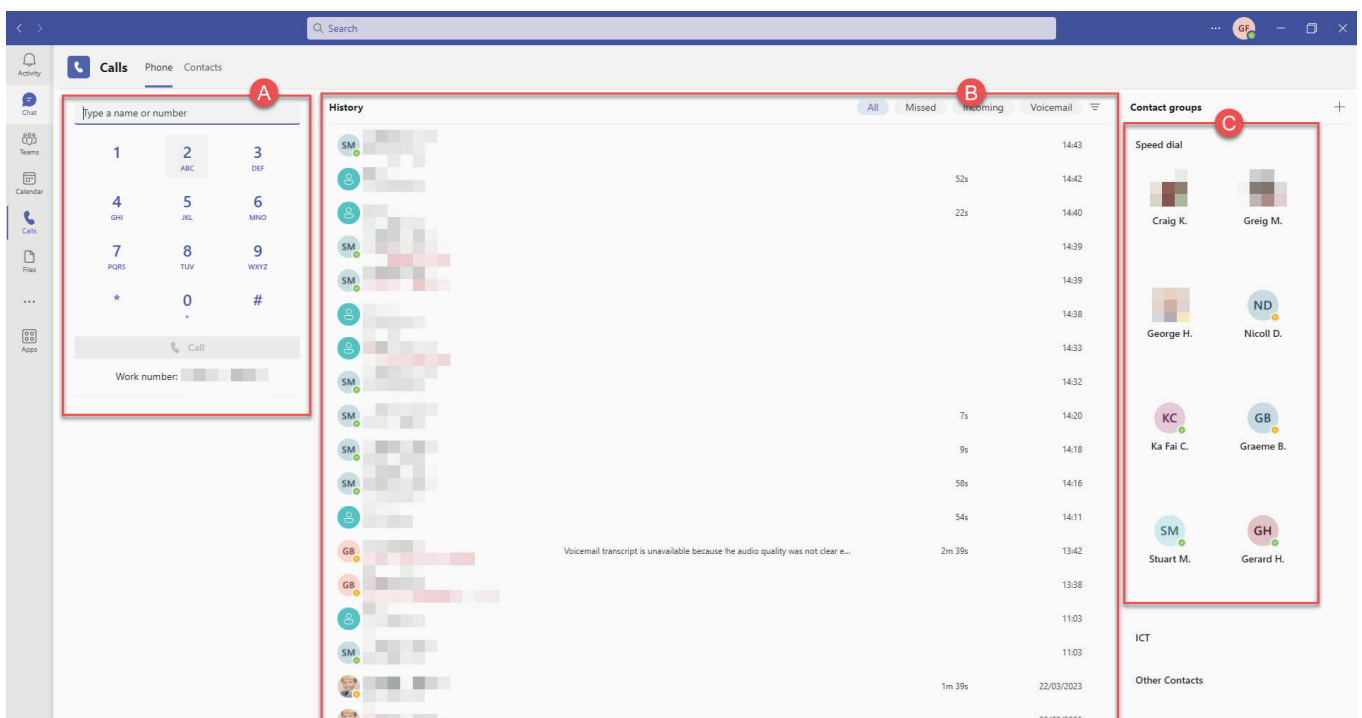

How do I view the 'Calls' section of Teams?

Why isn't my phone ringing?

Teams is aware of entries in your calendar. If you are showing as busy or out the office in Outlook, Teams will not ring when calls are received.

When you are creating entries in your diary that may be more reminders than meetings, you might want to set your diary to show "Free".

If all diaries are showing that people are unavailable then no phones will ring and the caller will be directed to voicemail.

A quick way to check. If the entry shows you are 'Free' the calendar entry will be white at the left hand side.
